SOUTH BEND, INDIANA

South Bend, with 400,000 residents, is the third most populous city in Indiana (after Indianapolis and Fort Wayne). The economy is based on manufacturing with a predominantly blue-collar work force. The major firms are auto industry-related, including Uniroyal (the tire manufacturer) and Bendix (which operates an auto parts plant). American Motors has a plant near South Bend which manufactures military trucks, many of which are exported to the Middle East. China may soon buy the trucks as a result of a recent visit by a Chinese trade delegation. Overall, Indiana ranks ninth in the export of manufactured products.

The economic difficulties of the auto industry have affected South Bend. Unemployment is 12 percent (compared to the 7.5 percent national average). Moreover, unemployment is even higher in the northern Indiana region (14 percent).

The University of Notre Dame is located on the outskirts of South Bend. Eighty percent of the students are from outside the state. Notre Dame's president, the Reverend Theodore Hesburgh, is well known for his role in humanitarian issues. He has been involved in efforts to combat world hunger and to resettle refugees. He also led the U.S. delegation to the UN Conference on Science and Technology for Development in 1979. Four months after his inauguration, President Carter delivered a speech on human rights at Notre Dame. As President, it was the first time he addressed a U.S. audience on the subject.

South Bend is in the congressional district of Representative John Brademas (D). He voted against the nuclear fuel sale to India as did Senators Bayh (D) and Lugar (R). Senator Lugar also voted to end the Soviet grain embargo (Senator Bayh did not vote).

Secretary of the Treasury Miller was in Indianapolis recently to encourage Indiana businessmen to bid on overseas projects sponsored by the World Bank. Indiana received only $1.4 million from such projects last year compared to $30 million received by neighboring Illinois.
